1. General standards of practice in UM

Professional ethics and transparency govern and guide conduct in Uría Menéndez (“UM” or the “Firm”).

The Firm’s standards of practice are entirely incompatible with any conduct that could potentially compromise the objectivity required in the decision-making process of those we interact with in carrying out our professional activities, both in the public sector (domestic and foreign civil servants) and the private sector (e.g. clients, suppliers, other professionals in the legal sector).

To that end, UM enforces a zero-tolerance policy on corruption. The policy is based both on the Firm’s Code of Conduct and the following rules and guidelines.

2. Essential considerations

Spanish and Portuguese criminal law prohibit and establish penalties for corruption in both the public and private sector.

In the public sector, offering or delivering a “gift or handout” (dádiva) to an authority or civil servant, whether domestic or foreign, or a third party linked to a civil servant (e.g. family, friends, business partners) or accepting the solicitation of an authority, civil servant or third party could, under the Spanish Criminal Code, constitute criminal bribery, or, under the Portuguese Criminal Code, the offence of corruption or undue receipt of an advantage. A “gift” can be anything of value: remuneration, favours and economic benefits of any type, gifts, services provided under favourable conditions, contracts, invitations, etc.

These actions can be criminal if the gift or object of value is offered or delivered either at the person’s initiative or if the person merely accepts a solicitation from an authority or civil servant. The conduct can also be criminal if the gift or object of value is linked to an illegal act by the authority or civil servant or a legal act, or if the offer, delivery or acceptance is made as consideration in the context of the civil general duties of the authority or civil servant, irrespective of any specific act by the civil servant.

The conduct can also be criminal if the purpose of the gift or object of value is to compensate the authority or civil servant for a prior act, whether or not legal.

For the purposes of UM’s Anti-corruption Policy, an “authority” is anyone who, whether by himself or herself, or as a member of a corporation, court or collegiate body, holds control or jurisdiction. Likewise, a “civil servant” refers to any person involved in carrying out public functions, whether directly by operation of law, by election or by appointment by an authority.¹

¹ For illustrative, non-exhaustive purposes only, the following are considered civil servants: mayors; city councillors; municipal technicians; elected members to municipal plenary sessions; presidents and councillors of the autonomous regions; elected members of the parliament of an autonomous region; staff of local, regional and central administrations; directors, managers and employees of municipal, regional and central undertakings; municipal, regional and central advisors, as well as analogous posts irrespective of official title; judges, magistrates, public prosecutors and legal secretaries; registrars; those who hold a legislative, administrative or judicial post or

The Criminal Codes of Spain and Portugal also criminalise influence peddling. Influencing an authority or civil servant, exploiting a prior personal relationship with the individual, or with another authority or civil servant, to procure a more favourable outcome for the legal or natural person exercising the influence or for a third party is a criminal act under both Criminal Codes. It is also a crime to solicit or accept any type of remuneration or compensation in exchange for exercising “undue influence” over a civil servant.

In the private sector, the Spanish Criminal Code and Portuguese Law 20/2008 of 21 April on criminal liability for corruption-related offences in international commerce and the private sector both criminalise private-to-private corruption, which involves a person, on his or her own account or through an intermediary, promising, offering or granting any type of unjustified benefits or advantages to managers, directors, employees or collaborating businesses or other organisational partners of any type seeking the favour, offer, or grant of benefits or advantages to the original person or a third party, failing to satisfy the corresponding obligations in the acquisition or sale of goods or the contracting of professional services. The conduct is criminal whether the gift or benefit is offered or delivered at the person’s own initiative or if offered or delivered in response to a request by the director, manager, business partner or employee of a third party.

This conduct is subject to severe punishment both for natural persons and the entity or legal person in whose name the natural person acts (e.g. fines, suspension of activities, prohibition of public contracting).

The only activities to fall outside the scope of the above prohibitions are courtesies, gifts, favours and services that are customary, generalised or courteous in the private and public sector and are not intended to alter or modify the decision-making process of the person to whom they are given or provided.

employment position in any country; persons who carry out public duties for a Member State of the EU or another country, including a public body or company; civil servants or agents of EU or a public international organisation; persons who have been assigned, and are carrying out, public-service functions that involve the management, in Member States or other countries, of the EU’s financial interests or making decisions involving those interests.

For the purpose of the Anti-corruption Policy, members of domestic and foreign political parties are treated the same as an authority or civil servant, as are candidates to domestic and foreign political positions.

Lastly, since the amendments made by Basic Law 1/2015 of 30 March, the Spanish Criminal Code also criminalises the illegal financing of political parties and prohibits, among other actions, making donations or other contributions to a political party, coalition or group of voters when those donations or contributions, irrespective of the amount, are made by a legal person. These actions are also set out in Portuguese Law 19/2003 of 20 June on the financing of political parties.

In addition to domestic law, Spain has ratified international treaties and conventions (of the UN, OECD, European Council, etc.) that prohibit and sanction corruption in the private and public sectors (including both domestic and foreign civil servants). The anticorruption legislation of the United States (the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act) and of the United Kingdom (Bribery Act 2010) are also potentially applicable to the extent that part of UM's activities are carried out in those countries. These international treaties and conventions from the US and UK are also instrumental reference documents in the fight against corruption.

UM's commitment to complying with these laws, treaties and international conventions is unconditional and forms an essential part of carrying out our activities pursuant to transparency and ethical principles.

The Anti-corruption Policy and its standards of practice are mandatory for all members of UM, including partners, lawyers² and support staff, both in Spain and in the Firm's offices outside of Spain. Likewise, and in consistency with the Manual on Criminal-Risk Prevention, the provisions established in the Anti-corruption Policy must be complied with in all areas of UM's activities, including UM's practices when providing legal advice to clients.

Non-compliance with the Anti-corruption Policy or any of its standards of practice will imply disciplinary measures or other actions depending on the type of relationship that the infringing party has with UM, including the termination of the relationship with UM, irrespective of its nature.

The Crime Prevention Unit, which forms part of the Professional Ethics, Risks and Compliance Department, will address and answer any questions regarding the application of the Anti-corruption Policy.

² Exclusively for the purposes of the Compliance Programme, this category includes not only professionals who are legally qualified to practice law, but also those who hold a law degree but are not currently qualified to practice law, such as graduados and estagiários.
